Daniel McGrath trained as a teacher in the Model School in Dublin before sailing to Australia with his bride in 1841. The Model School was where students attended to be trained to be teachers. “Another of the old colonists has gone the way we must all go. It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Mr. Daniel McGrath, the first and oldest schoolmaster in Ipswich, at the advanced age of 82years and 10 months. Always a strong hearty man, he enjoyed good health till last December, when it was diagnosed that he was suffering from the disease known as black cancer. Since then he has been attended by Dr. Lightoller, but the incurable disease ran its course, and he passed away quietly yesterday morning, retaining consciousness to the end. The Rev. A. Horan was very kind and attentive to him during his illness. Mr McGrath, as before state, was one of the oldest schoolmaster’s in Ipswich. Over half a century of his existence was spent in the colony, mainly in Ipswich, and the major part of that time in training the young. He was a native of Craggyrine, County Tipperary, Ireland. He landed in Sydney from the ship Livingstone in 1841, and after remaining there for some three months, came to Brisbane. At that time he was one of a few free colonists of the then Northern Division of new South Wales. There were not many houses in Brisbane in those days. The journey from Sydney, by sailing vessel occupied twenty-eight days. From the site of the present metropolis of Queensland he went straight to the Darling Downs, where he spent the following two or three years as tutor to the Leslie family. Ipswich was his next place of abode, and he has stayed her pretty well ever since. At the time Mr. McGrath first passed through Ipswich – or what was then known as “Limestone” – it contained one residence – a substantial bark place opposite where the Hon. George Thorn’s house is now. He opened the first school in East Street in a little wooden building near the present Primitive Methodist Church. Amongst his pupils we are informed, were the Hon George Thorn, M.L.A. , Mr. H. Campbell and others. He next had a school in Nicholas Street. Then, with the Rev. Father Luckey, he assisted in building the old slab church and school in connection with the Roman Catholic denomination, and on its completion he taught there, being the first teacher in this the first Catholic School in the town. The first National School in West Ipswich, which was established where the girl's school there may be seen now, was under his management. A private school at the Cutting was his next charge and after that he opened private schools at Walloon and Redbank successively. Still engaged in the tuition of the youthful mind, these steps were followed by his appointment as assistant teacher at the East Ipswich State School. This was the last position he held publicly and dominie. His career as a school master was an honourable one and many of his quondam pupils have always retained a warm feeling for him. His next venture was as a storekeeper in Brisbane Street, in the premises occupied until a few years ago by Mr. D. Shine. When the business was taken over from him by Mr. shine some fifteen or sixteen years ago, he retired into private life. Of a rather retiring disposition, he never took any prominent part in public affairs, but his sterling qualities were highly appreciated by his many friends, and with the deepest sorrow has been expressed at his demise. He leaves a family of five sons and two daughters, all whom are grown up, and some them well advanced in years. Four of the sons – Daniel, Malachy, Frank and James – are well known teamsters in the Port Douglas and Cooktown districts, and have been there since the Palmer River rush; while Mr. William McGrath is a highly-respected solicitor in Maryborough. Possessed as he undoubtedly was, of a remarkably strong constitution, had it not been for the fell disease with which he was afflicted, it is considered that Mr. McGrath would still hold a good lease of life. He certainly lived to a ripe old age, and lived long enough to see the colony grow from a small seed, as it were, into a goodly tree. The funeral is to start from his late residence in Mary Street at half past 10 o'clock this morning". The son of a prominent Scottish migrant family in NSW, he had been a successful businessman in Sydney and Winsor before seeing opportunities in the new colony of Moreton Bay. His entrepreneurial spirit led him to make the arduous journey to Brisbane and in 1842 he purchased land in the very centre of the infant city. This was the year when Brisbane was declared a free settlement. He bought two pieces of land opposite what is now the Old Treasury Building (the corner of George and Elizabeth Streets) and another in Grey Street near the entrance to the Convention Centre car park. In 1852 he also bought land in Ipswich and surrounding districts (some pieces in the names of his wife Isabella and of his children, John, Maria and William). It was to Ipswich that he brought his family in 1852 and established the business of Panton & Co in Brisbane Street, Ipswich in 1852. he sold ‘just about everything, from rice and prunes to shoes and shirts and sheepskins. The Pantons built a fine house nearby. It was called Claremont, though once owned by the National Trust of Queensland, it is now privately owned. There was a wharf on the riverbank below the house where paddle steamers from Brisbane could tie up and unload cargo.

Thorn, George (snr)  Source: State Library Queensland website	1839 (Moreton Bay & Ipswich)	B. 11.04.1806. D. 28.04.1876. In 1839 George accepted an appointment as Overseer of Government Herds at Moreton Bay. The same year he accepted the post of superintendent of the convict settlement at Limestone. It started off as a cattle establishment but became an agricultural establishment, often referred to as the "ploughed station". In 1843 George retired from being superintendent of the cattle establishment when the convict establishment was closed down. George and Jane ventured into the commercial world when they set up a shop to sell supplies and working clothes. They then began a simple house of accommodation, where travellers could rest for the night. In that year, George also purchased the first land in Ipswich - two allotments on the south east corner of East and Brisbane Streets; both allotments fronted Brisbane Street. He went on to accumulate more land - Rosebrook /Normanby, Nukinenda and Warra Warra stations totalling 58,000 acres (23,472 ha), and allotments in Toowoomba, Moggill and Cleveland. At one time, Thorn owned Claremont, Normanby homestead, the property on the corner of East and Brisbane streets, (now the Bendigo Bank Corner), Action Realty Corner (site of the original "Queens Arms" and two general stores in Ipswich. 1846: George was proprietor of the Queens Arms Hotel (cnr Brisbane and East Streets.) 1847: George opened a wholesale and retail store, selling basic groceries and clothing. In 1850: George took on the positions of Secretary/Treasurer and Clerk of Course for the new racecourse. 1856: George served as a member of the Ipswich Hospital committee. 1859: The Thorns erected their new residence on the corner of Brisbane and East streets. It later became the Palais Royal Hotel. 1860 to 1863: George was a Member of the First Queensland Parliament as the member for West Moreton. 1861: George was one of the first trustees of the School of Arts. 1862-1865: George was elected and served as an Alderman on the Ipswich City Council. 1863: The Ipswich Grammar School was established and George was one of the first trustees. 1863-1898: the Thorn family purchased Claremont. In addition to the roles described above, George helped establish the Anglican Church, Ipswich railway, Botanic Gardens, North Australian Club, The racing club and the Queensland Pastoral and Agricultural Society. After George died nearly all his rental properties and vacant land was sold. It appears that an attempt was made to auction the grazing/ farm properties. They were not sold and the land was split up amongst the Thorn family.

After boarding at Ipswich Grammar School, Fred graduated with first-class honours in geology and mineralogy from the University of Queensland (B.Sc., 1922; M.Sc., 1924; D.Sc., 1939), and won a government gold medal for outstanding merit. Taking up a university foundation travelling scholarship at St John's College, Cambridge (Ph.D., 1925), he wrote a thesis on marine Cretaceous sequences of Australia. On his return to Queensland in 1925, Whitehouse was appointed government geologist. Next year he began lecturing in geology at the University of Queensland; over three decades he was to alternate between working for the State government and the university. He helped to map the geology of western Queensland while studying the region's fossil fauna. In 1941 he was awarded the Royal Society of New South Wales's Walter Burfitt prize and medal for his work on the stratigraphy of the Great Artesian Basin. On 7 July that year he enlisted in the Australian Imperial Force. Commissioned lieutenant, Royal Australian Engineers, in January 1942, he applied his geological knowledge to road-building in Queensland and New Guinea in 1942-43, and to formulating procedures for amphibious assaults across coral reefs in 1944-45. He travelled extensively in the South-West Pacific Area and in September 1945 rose to temporary lieutenant colonel. Mentioned in dispatches for his work, he was demobilized on 21 December. In 1946-47 Whitehouse was seconded to the Department of the Co-ordinator-General of Public Works; he was a member of the committee on post-war reconstruction and was involved with the northern Australia development project. He resumed lecturing at the university in 1948, and was promoted to associate-professor next year. Continuing his studies on the stratigraphy of the artesian basin, he described the natural leakage from the system, particularly the mound springs. This was probably his most significant contribution to geology, and was published as an appendix, 'The Geology of the Queensland Portion of the Great Australian Artesian Basin', in the report, Artesian Water Supplies in Queensland (1954). He was also interested in quaternary geomorphology. With his energy and outstanding wit, Whitehouse inspired both colleagues and students. A governor of Cromwell College, University of Queensland, he was active in the university's rowing club and dramatic society. He was president of the Queensland Naturalists' Club and Nature-Lovers' League (1929) and the Royal Society of Queensland (1940-41). In the Boy Scouts' Association, he rose from rover leader in 1932 to deputy chief commissioner in 1954-55. He was leading eight hundred senior scouts on a hike across Fraser Island in 1951 when one contracted poliomyelitis and the camp was quarantined for a week. Rations were in short supply and he supervised the boys as they used their scouting skills to live partly off the land. Whitehouse toured Queensland in 1953, visiting schools and showing a film to publicize the university. Two years later he was dismissed from his teaching post after receiving a three-month suspended sentence for committing an act of 'gross indecency' with a young man. There was no suggestion that the charge had any connection with his public activities. He then worked as a geological consultant. Continuing to participate in the work of scientific organizations, he was president (1972-73) of the Anthropological Society of Queensland. Unmarried, he died on 22 March 1973 in Brisbane and was cremated with Anglican rites. Source: Claire Wilson.
